

About Me

Hello, my name is Jon Tewes and I guess you could call me a web designer/developer. I am passionate about making the web a better place by creating beautiful and usable websites. Although my passion lies with designing and building the web, to limit me to being purely a web designer/developer is selling me short. I have been on the customer service side, the management side and the development side of business. I find that you get the best results from looking at any problem from these three different perspectives. I am known for my work ethic, creativity and my wide range of knowledge. I have the ability to look at a project from the outside, the creativity to come up with an innovative solution, and the knowledge to see it through to completion.
